BULGARIA'S LIBERATOR.

The Story of an Indian Who Rose from Obscurity to an Honored Position in the World.

The Life and Services of James A. McGahan, the Famous Newspaper Correspondent—The Saviour of a Down-trodden People.

Few Indians men were more generally known than the late and lamented James A. McGahan, the famous newspaper correspondent, and few names are more deeply engraved in the hearts of the people of their own and other nations. From the fact that McGahan was well known in Fort Wayne and frequently visited here, an account of his life will certainly be of interest. Still further interest has been created in the history of the young man from the action taken by the last legislature of his native state, Ohio, in bringing his remains to that state, his birth-place, for interment. The following account of his life and services have been obtained from several sources and many points from an intimate friend who is well known to the writer:

McGahan was born in Perry county, Ohio, June 1, 1844, his father being Irish born and his mother, though born in the United States, of Irish parentage. His surroundings were of a most humble character, his home being a log cabin located on a small farm. But these were favorable to the development of an active and vigorous mind, and he early evidenced the possession of more than ordinary ability. He was a great reader of history, biography and of the best literature, and used to delight the children with whom he associated with stories from the books he had read. His early education was obtained at Pigeon's Roost. He much desired to be a school teacher, and when, at seventeen years of age, he applied for the Pigeon's Roost school, and it was refused him on account of his youth though the directors were satisfied as to his intellectual qualifications, his failure to get it nearly broke his heart, and he left that part of the country, and it is said, never returned. Going to Huntington, Ind., where he remained several years. He found employment in various pursuits. He taught school during the winter months and in the summer worked at any thing which he found to do, he was for a time employed in a brick yard and afterwards found employment in the Democrat office, which was then controlled by S. F. Winter, whose name is familiar to many of THE SENTINEL'S readers in this city. His ambition spurred him to the accomplishment of greater deeds than the mere setting of type and working an old hand press, and he at length finally determined to go to St. Louis in order to perfect himself in book-keeping. At this time he had no intention of going to Europe, but had his eye fixed upon the profession of law and was patiently awaiting an opportunity to perfect himself in his chosen profession. In company with a friend, who now resides at Huntington, he entered a commercial school in St. Louis, but his friend remained only a short time, leaving McGahan alone. He, after a time, secured a position as book-keeper in a large firm of that city, and then it was that he determined to go to Europe for the purpose of finishing his education. In coming to this decision he was largely influenced by his steadfast friend, Gen. Phil Sheridan, whose birth-place was near that of McGahan's, and who took a deep interest in the young man. In 1863, Jim, as he was known, sailed for Europe, and in the beginning of his journey, stopped in this city and spent the day with several friends. He settled in Brussels and devoted himself to his studies, but he became acquainted with a correspondent of the New York Herald, who urged him to send that paper a cablegram and see if it would be published. He finally did so and shortly afterwards received a commission from Mr. Bennett. This was the beginning of his career as a journalist and the study of law was henceforth lost sight of. His letters were so satisfactory that when the war between Germany and France began, he was employed by the Herald to report it, which he did to its satisfaction and the pleasure of its readers. He was in Paris during the commune and narrowly escaped losing his life.

After that war closed McGahan spent some months reporting the conference upon the Alabama claims at Geneva, and in visiting several popular resorts in southern Russia. In 1878 he was commissioned by the Herald to accompany Gen. Kauffman in his expedition against Khiva. The Russians were determined that no correspondent should accompany the expedition, and all abandoned their intention of doing so except McGahan, who, without giving any intimation as to what he would do, quietly started on his daring journey across the trackless steppes. Though a detachment of troops was sent in pursuit, he out-traveled them, and they were finally obliged to give up the chase, not, however, until they had made their question, "Have you seen the American?" of national interest. Such a ride as McGahan's was deemed impossible, and his story would not have been believed but that his leaving Fort Petrowsky on a certain date and arriving at

Gen. Kauffman's camp, on the Oxus river, about a month later, was vouched for by unimpeachable witnesses. Despite the fact that his orders had been disobeyed, Gen. Kauffman welcomed him, called him a brave fellow, and the emperor, when he heard of his courageous journey, presented him with the order of St. Stanislaus. The officers and soldiers took him to their arms and henceforth until his death he was the most beloved of any foreigner by the Russian soldiers. The story of his adventures during this memorable campaign is told in his book, "Campaigning on the Oxus and the Fall of Khiva." The Herald was the only paper which gave a report of the war, and when the adventures of McGahan became known through Russian sources, he immediately became famous.

In 1875 McGahan went with an expedition sent out by the New York Herald to the Arctic regions. In 1876 he made an engagement with the London Daily News, and the summer of that year found him at Constantinople. From time to time rumors were in circulation that irregular Turkish troops called Bashi-Bazouks, had committed horrible atrocities in Bulgaria, and that an investigation was demanded. The rumors were denied by the authorities, but so impressed was McGahan that there was some grounds for them that he resolved to investigate them himself. Accompanied by Eugene Schuyler, he started for Bulgaria, and though every obstacle was thrown in his way by the authorities, he successfully presented his work. He found that the rumors circulated in Constantinople to have been but a title of the truth. Everywhere he went he saw the ground strewn with dead bodies, mutilated in the most horrible manner. No pains had been taken to bury them, and the dogs were feasting upon human flesh. The result of his investigations showed that thousands of men, women and children had been massacred, and the most horrible outrages had been practiced upon the unfortunate people, a record of which is unfit for print.

McGahan's soul was fired with indignation, and he told the people that within a year he would return with the army of the Czar and avenge them. His letters aroused the civilized world, especially England and Russia. Russia was prompted by them to declare war against Turkey, which resulted in the Berlin Congress of 1878, and the changes made thereby in the map of Europe.

After the cessation of hostilities McGahan went to Constantinople, where he died June 9, 1878, of black typhus fever, which he contracted while nursing Lieutenant Green, the American military attaché with the Russian army, leaving a wife, a Russian lady, and little boy. He was buried on his thirty-fourth birthday, in the Greek cemetery at Pera. His wife, a very estimable lady, now resides in New York city, and a number of his relatives are residents of Toledo.

It is certainly gratifying to know that the remains of so illustrious a man are soon to be interred in his native state, although his own people gave him such little encouragement in the commencement of his life.

Some Valuable Testimony.

The following voluntary testimony was written by Dr. William Sheppard, a graduate of the Royal Veterinary College of London, and a fellow of the Veterinary Medical association of England, who has a national reputation in this country as one of the best practical and scientific veterinary surgeons of this country, and also veterinary editor of the Spirit of the Turf:

OTTAWA, Ill., Sept. 27, 1883.
MESSRS. LAWRENCE, WILLIAMS & CO., Gentlemen: As you are aware, I have used in my practice Gombault's Caustic Balm for the past three years, with I am pleased to inform you, the most satisfactory results. The cases in which I have principally used it have been in throat and lung affections, such as laryngitis, strangles, severe cases of influenza, bronchitis, pneumonia, etc. In the above I find that it acts as an excellent counter-irritant, without causing the animal any great pain or producing any constitutional disturbance during its action. This I deem a very important feature in the treatment of all the above diseases. I have likewise found it very beneficial in bad sprains of muscular tissue, such as injuries to the shoulder or hip. I am governed a great deal by the class of cases as to how I apply it, but invariably full strength, without being diluted with anything.

Very respectfully,
Wm. Sheppard, M. R. C. V. S.
Every bottle of the genuine Gombault Caustic Balm has the signature of Lawrence, Williams & Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, on the label. They are the sole importers and proprietors for this country.

BRISK BUSINESS.

A Review of the Real Estate Exchange Since April 1 Until Date—Heavy Transfers in the City and County—The Outlook.

Real estate is looking up and since April 1 the dealing has been heavy. Money is quite plenty here and small capitalists prefer to invest their savings in tenable property, rather than loan it at 6 and 8 percent interest. The dismissal of men from the railroad shops had a depressing effect, but the boom in other industries more than off-set the uneasy feeling and real estate men found plenty of customers for tenable and salable real estate. In the past few weeks the prices went up 10 per cent, and houses rent for big money, and are difficult to get for love or gold. The outlook is cheering and a feeling of safety and prosperity prevails everywhere. Following are the real estate exchanges recorded since April 1:

Why Should Living Men Complain?

An Honest Life, a Pure Life, a Christian Life Is Always Worth Living.

First, a life that sets out with the idea of money-getting never pays for reason you will never get enough to satisfy you. The poorest men are those who have a million dollars, and the poorest are those who have a half million dollars. There is not a sciss grinder on the streets of New York Brooklyn that is so absorbingly anxious to make money as those men who have for many years piled it up in stocks, government securities or tenement houses or city blocks. You ought to see the jump when the fire bell rings. You ought to see their excitement when the Manhattan explodes. You ought to scrutinize their feelings when reformation is proposed. Their nerves tremble like harp strings, but without any music in the vibration. They read the morning report of Wall street doings with an excitement that threatens paralytic apoplexy. More, probably, they have a private telegraph in their house, or a phone, through which they can receive every breath of change in the market. They are eaten up with the ease of accumulation. It gets into their heart, into their liver, into their spleen, into their brain, into their bones. Chemists have analyzed the human body, and found it to be made up of so much iron and so much magnesia, and so much chloride of potassium. If these finar behemoths were analyzed by some modern chemist they would be found to be made up of copper and gold, and silver, and zinc, and lead, and coal, and iron. The style of life is not worth living. There are so many earthquakes in it; there are so many agonies in it; there are so many

Now, I must lay out my plan for the next sixty years in the world, and that will make me eighty. I may not live

A life for God is always worth living. An honest life, a pure life, a decorated life, a Christian, is life worth living.

It would be no difficult thing to you believe that old Peter Cooper, tying glue, then amassing a fortune, building a great specimen of philanthropy that has found its echo in a thousand other educational philanthropies, is life worth living. It would be no difficult thing to make you believe that she life worth living. Susan Wesley, tying out one son to organize Methodism and the other son to make all ages sing with hymnology. Or that she life worth living. Florence Lees, organizing institutions for the scientific nursing the sick in England, and then when broke out between France and Germany going to the front, and with her hands scraping the mud off the bodies of soldiers lying in the trenches, and tying the heads night to keep down the rattle, and pushing back to his cot the German freized with his wounds, to persist in dashing out and going to "liebe mütter," and major-generalcy back to let pass this angel of mercy. You can understand that the Darling, the heroine of the lifeboat is life worth living, and do not wonder that the proprietors of the Atlantic theater, in London, offered her $100 a night to sit in a life-boat in a ship scene being enacted. Ah, my friends, all your lives are worth living, whether conspicuous or inconspicuous, if you try to live right. Let this remark sink deep into your souls. You are not rewarded not according to the needs of your work, but according to use you make of the talents you possess. And then remember that this life is the vestibule of another life—and what spices the entrance of a palace? It

Saturday, it seems, was an unfortunate day for the thriving little city of Ligonier. In the early part of the day Isaac Calvin, the founder of the town, breathed his last, about noon Frank Cochran met with an accident that proved fatal twenty-four hours later. At 9:30 o'clock Hon. Henry Hostetter was numbered with the vast army, making the trio complete. An accident also occurred at the stock yards, in which Mr. Selig came near losing his life. All these were enough to make the day one long to be remembered.

The LaGrange Standard says: "John Draker, of Fort Wayne, will occupy the new dwelling on the fair grounds when completed, and have charge of the track and grounds. He owns Frank Forrester and Conductor, the trotting stallions that were here last fall. They trot in 2:30 or less."

Thad. Butler, of the Andrews Express, in speaking of his visit to this city last Monday, says: "It was also our pleasure to enjoy a half hour's chat with J. C. Wills, foreman of the Wabash shops, and wife, at their pleasant home, and we had a royal visit with H. C. Schrader and family, old Wabash friends, who have been for many years, residents of Fort Wayne."

The Indianapolis projectors of the Fort Wayne, Lafayette and St. Louis road revived their interest in the concern, and some of them say that work will be opened this season. This is the Wabash canal road, and the entire scheme has been looked upon with favor by the Fort Wayne and Lafayette people, but the Wabash company, whose line will be paralleled by the Ft. W., L. & St. L., gave it a backset a year ago.

In regard to the assessment of the Wabash employees for the purpose of maintaining a hospital the Peru Sentinel says: "An order has been issued from Wabash headquarters, stating that hereafter all employees on the road who receive fifty dollars per month and upward will be assessed fifty cents per month to help sustain the hospital at East St. Louis, and all whose wages are below that sum will be assessed thirty-five cents for the same purpose. There is considerable grumbling on the part of the men over the order, which they say will cause fat places to be made for several pet physicians. Nearly all the employees who get hurt have homes to which they would prefer going, and if the assessment was to provide a fund out of which all the injured men could receive so much per week, there would be no kicking against the order."

FUMBLING AWAY.

Close Game Between the Fort Wayne Peoria Clubs--Winding of the Northwestern League Clubs--League Games Yesterday.

The Fort Wayne and Peoria clubs met the second time yesterday and played a close, if not a brilliant game. The home team is weak at the bat and needs a second baseman, or the second baseman needs rest in profusion. He is vile. The Peoria club is no better off and just why they were allowed to win the game yesterday, is a mystery peculiar to Fort Wayne plays. The attendance was not large, and all were tired looking at the fumbles. Following is the score:

Edward O'Rourke and Miss Jennie Brown End a Quiet Courtship by Kissing--The Young People Gladly Avoid Anxious Relatives and are now in Michigan.

Some few months ago, at a social gathering in the country, Edward O'Rourke and Miss Jennie Brown met. The young people loved at first sight and sought a quiet nook to exchange vows of affection. They met again and the interviews elicited a mild parental protest, because of their youth. The command of stern parents did not blight their love, which grew warmer as spring developed towards summer. Master Edward did not propose to be embarrassed by anticipated obstacles in his love affair and proposed an elopement to his sweetheart. The young lady assented and the time was fixed for last night. In the evening Miss Jennie left her home, ostensibly for a ramble. She met her lover and both walked to the west end, where flowers are fragrant and the air is peculiarly adapted for love making. The west-bound midnight passenger train on the Pittsburg was flagged at the Broadway crossing and the lovers boarded and purchased tickets for Chicago, from whence they were to go to Michigan and be married to-day. While the young couple were awaiting a train in the west end, their relatives became alarmed and searched vainly for them. Ed O'Rourke is the youngest son of Supt. P. S. O'Rourke, of the Grand Rapids road, and an apprentice machinist in the Pittsburg shop. Miss Brown is the daughter of Mrs. William Brown, of 159 Montgomery street, and a cousin of John H. Brennan, the grocer, and a niece of William Reed, the well-known Adams county farmer. Miss Jennie is a very pretty girl, and it is probable the young people will be given a parental blessing when they return. Supt. P. S. O'Rourke is now in Kentucky and was informed of the love affair by telegram by his son, William S. O'Rourke, the attorney.

CHEMICAL TEST.

Office of M. DELAFONTAINE,
Analytical and Consulting Chemist.

Dr. Price—Dear Sir: I have analyzed Baking Powders advertised as absolutely pure, and find they contain Ammonia. I also find contrary to my expectation that cakes baked with such powders still retain Ammonia. Therefore I cannot believe any longer than the use of so Powerful a Drug in baking is indifferent to Public Health. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder Contains No Ammonia. I have used it in my own family for years. It is pure and wholesome.

Housekeepers Test.

Place a can top down on a hot stove until heated, then remove the cover, and smell. A chemist will not be required to detect the presence of Ammonia.
